

National Food Redistribution Regulatory Policy

1. Regulatory Framework Overview

This document details local health codes and national legislation regulating surplus food donation and distribution. Surplus food redistribution acts as a vital tool to reduce waste while strictly conforming to food security standards.

2. Good Samaritan Protection Act

Under the National Food Donor Protection Act (Good Samaritan Law), donors (hotels, restaurants, individuals) and non-profit distributors are protected from civil and criminal liability regarding the condition of donated food, provided the food was donated in good faith, without gross negligence or intentional misconduct.

3. Health and Hygiene Licensing Requirements

Any facility preparing or distributing cooked food must hold a valid Food Safety License. Volunteers handling unpackaged food must wear clean gloves, hairnets, and face masks, and must have undergone basic hygiene training to ensure zero cross-contamination.

4. Food Waste Disposal Policies

Surplus food that fails visual inspection must be sent to composting or waste-to-energy facilities. It is illegal to discard fit-for-compost food into general garbage landfill sites under municipal waste guidelines.

5. FSSAI Regulations for Food Donors

SURPLUS FOOD REGULATIONS specify that donors must verify the food is fresh and hygienic prior to donation. Food distribution logs containing preparation dates, batch numbers, temperature history, and donor ids must be maintained for 6 months.

6. Tax Deductions for Commercial Donors

Commercial establishments (supermarkets, wholesale hotels) are eligible for tax deductions on the cost value of donated inventory under Section 80G, provided the donation is routed through certified non-profit entities matching the Jivahar platform database.
